. I have created a table in my database with a template that was sent to me by a previous contact on a website. The code provided for adding columns was a bit. I have changed the code and added the fields to the template I want to use to the table. Now. The question is how can I now retrieve the actual values of the fields that were added to the table? I had thought that it might be a column that was added for number fields or date fields, but the column name is unique, so that doesn't seem to be the problem. A: The table fields are named by PHP_INI_NAMED. Column names are listed in the php.ini file which is located at c:\xampp\php\php.ini. You can see the names there. You can define the table in code and retrieve the values. e.g. function newRecord($arrFields) { $db = Database::connect(); Database::instantiate('newTableName'); foreach($arrFields as $arrField) { $db->field_name = $arrField['field_name']; Database::insertRecord('newTableName', $arrFields); } Database::disconnect(); return true; } The target genes in the Sp1/Sp3-regulated interleukin-6 gene are up-regulated in human umbilical vein endothelial cells exposed to angiotensin-II. This study demonstrates that transcriptional factors Sp1 and Sp3 are present in both human umbilical vein endothelial cells (HUVECs) and glioblastoma cells. The interleukin-6 gene is up-regulated in the HUVECs treated with angiotensin-II. Electrophoretic mobility shift assays revealed that Sp1 and Sp3 bind to the IL-6 promoter, and an electrophoretic mobility shift assay using nuclear extracts prepared from HUVECs showed that angiotensin-II up-regulates Sp1 and Sp3 binding to the IL-6 promoter. Mutation of the Sp1 and Sp3 binding site of the IL-6 promoter reduced the angiotensin
